

Ugo Colombo at the Brickell Flatiron sales gallery

Four Score

Miami gets even glitzier thanks to Tiffany & Co.'s new store in the Miami Design District.

Under the eye of new design director Francesca Amfitheatrof, the brand has launched a successful T-themed collection of minimal everyday jewelry that comes in sterling silver and gold (above). “This store is our first free-standing, street-facing store in Miami,” says Jonathan Bruckner, the brand’s regional vice president. The new bi-level boutique carries the gamut alongside artwork by contemporary artists, hand-picked by the new designer.

SCHNABEL MEETS MIAMI

Amid the canyons of construction cranes that are transforming Brickell into a metropolis overnight lies the lot for Julian Schnabel’s Southern sanctuary. The New York-based artist with a knack for interior design has been tapped for Brickell Flatiron, a 64-story residential tower that will be among the tallest buildings in Miami (700 feet!) upon completion in 2017. Its common areas will be decorated with custom treasures inspired by Schnabel—who designed the Palazzo Chupi residential building in Manhattan’s West Village—such as shark’s tooth-shaped bronze light fixtures, an oversized biomorphic mantle and a vintage sofa upholstered in peacock fabric and fringe. “Every white marble lobby here started to look the same to me,” says the project’s Ugo Colombo, founder of CMC Group, a Miami development firm known for quality design long before starchitects infiltrated the landscape. “His style has a Spanish flair, too, that speaks to Latin Americans.” But will Miami Beach-favoring New Yorkers come? Colombo is pulling out all the stops, starting with a rooftop pool with 360-degree views. A glass exterior, solid wood doors and Snaidero kitchens with Miele appliances also compete with their contemporary counterparts across the bay. “I think what will appeal to urbanites most, though, is being able to walk outside and have so much within a single block,” he says.

1001 SOUTH MIAMI AVENUE; BRICKELLFLATIRON.COM

114 NE 39TH STREET; TIFFANY.COM

ITALIAN IMPORTS

Luminaire saluted its 30th anniversary by commissioning Italian architect Piero Lissoni to revamp its 15,000-square-foot flagship in Coral Gables, nearly half of which is now dedicated to B&B Italia. “No other dealer in the U.S. owns a showroom built from the ground up that reflects their philosophy,” says the showroom’s president Nasir Kassamali. In addition to being a perfect setting to showcase the designer furniture maker as its official Southeast partner, Kassamali said his Bauhaus-inspired building’s interiors needed an update. 2331 PONCE DE LEON BOULEVARD; LUMINAIRE.COM

IN THE MEX

With a taqueria opening on every corner, Miami is beginning to resemble SoCal.

BODEGA TAQUERIA Y TEQUILA brings the street stand inside: the roomy restaurant’s kitchen is in an Airstream trailer. Choose from South Beach veteran toque Bernie Matz’s eight homemade hot sauces for tacos, like braised pork belly and guajillo pepper.

1220 16TH STREET; BODEGASOUTHBEACH.COM

TAQUIZA grinds its own Mexican corn for blue masa tortillas and chips made daily. Adventurous tacos are Mexican truffle, which grows on corn stalks, and beef tongue simmered in Victoria beer.

1506 COLLINS AVENUE; TAQUIZAMIAMI.COM

A homesick California girl launched COYO with an emphasis on natural ingredients. Healthier standouts are charred octopus and pickled jalapeño tacos and quinoa croquetas. 2300 NW SECOND AVENUE COYOTACO.COM

PIZZA PIZZA PIZZA

Miami has a palate for Neapolitan pies that use premium flour.

Dough rises 18 hours before baking in a 900-degree oven at PROOF. The oxtail topping has been the boîte’s biggest hit so far.

3328 NORTH MIAMI AVENUE; PROOFPIZZA.COM

Located in a hip art and design compound, IRONSIDE also shows the love to vegans and gluten-free diners. Don’t miss its artichoke, pine nut and Parmesan salad.

7580 NE 4TH COURT; PIZZAIRONSIDE.COM

Part of the Miami River’s burgeoning cuisine scene, cozy CRUST focuses on New York-style pizza in combos like prosciutto, fig and blue cheese. 668 NW 5TH STREET; CRUST-USA.COM Order a margherita or gorgonzola-and-pear pizza at the bella cavernous CIBO WINE BAR, while the suspended wine fairy grabs your bottle of Barolo.

200 SOUTH POINTE DRIVE; CIBOWINEBAR.COM

Sunny Centennial: Miami Beach celebrates its 100th birthday with a massive oceanfront concert on March 26.

High Figures

It was about time Miami got an over-the-top private gym, but at Anatomy at 1220, workouts are only the beginning. In addition to tapping interior designer François Frossard (The Forge, LIV), founders Chris Paciello, a nightlife impresario, and Marc Megna, a sought-after strength and conditioning coach, spared no expense. Members receive a full medical review and regular care like B12 shots at their onsite FITT Lab and recovery treatments including massages and cold plunges. “It’s a one-stop shop for fitness,” says Paciello, of amenities that pump up even the most jaded gym rats. “Using the stationary bike and treadmill in the altitude chamber simulates working out in the mountains. It makes performing at sea level very easy after.”

1220 20TH STREET; ANATOMYAT1220.COM

